

Week 4 Formative:

Looking back: Telling a story

Present an outline of where you have journeyed over the past few weeks. You are NOT being asked to describe exactly what you've produced, but to lay out a map of your ideas and any interesting concepts that you have identified that might present fruitful opportunities for exploration in the future. This is a reflective conversation.

If you need to provide written content that is allowed, however, telling is an important aspect of this learning experience... it isn't about being accurate it's about using your imagination to tell a story about where you've been.

The depth of your ideas, speculations (the forming of a theory or conjecture without firm evidence), fabulations (relate invented stories), contrivances (a thing which is created skilfully and inventively to serve a particular purpose) feelings (an idea or belief, especially a vague or irrational one ☺)

Thinking forward, a different sort of telling.

When presenting your forward-thinking – try to be as concise as possible, and provide evidence for your decision-making.

Think about how you might provide a spoken word plan or map, where to from here.

This is less reflective (relating to or characterized by deep thought; thoughtful) and more directive (an official or authoritative instruction).

NOTE: evidence may include discussing or showing what you learned from your failures.
